A bright-eyed little girl of nine year got on board a Kausas l'acific train, bound for Deaver. She had never before been beyoud the limits of her Eistern home, and manifested unusual interest lo all she saw. The wide plains and the prairie dogs inter ested her, but she was most anxious to see a genui e specimen of that purely West ern product-a cowboy. The train was waiting at a station in Konses when the longed for cowbay appeared. He was a typical specimen-wid; sombrero, leather breeches, red finnel shirt, a beit filled with knives and pistois, and a desperate-looking character generally.

"There is a cowboy for you," whispered a gentlemen to the little giri.

"Wini I that?" she asked in unteigned surprise and evident disappointment "Why. I always thought a cowboy was part hoy and part cow."

PERSISTENCE AND INGENUITY OF THE PROFESSIONAL PAUPER.

Case of a Woman with an Invaited Husband and Three Suffering Children-The Facial Muscles Thoroughly Under Coatroi-A Professional Whine.

"I'm in great distress, sir! and I really don't know whom to appeal to. My husband is lying sick in the hospital leaving mo with three children at home and no food to put into their mouths. The landlord says he'll turn us into the street at the end of the week.

The spenker was n woman of about middle age, of simbly genteel appearance, with wan, wrinkled face in which each fenture seemed to vie with its neighbor in the expression of deep-scated, uncompromising inclancholy, The man appealed to was standing talking to two others in front of a New York hotel, and his first inclination was to say: "I've nothing for you!" but, turning to do so, he was struck with the evident helplessness of the woman as portrayed in her appearance and the plending tones of her voice. Instinctively his hand went into his pocket as did that of one of his companions, the result being a small donation of silver from each. The third man looked at the woman unmoved. He carefully knocked the ashes from his partly finished eigar and walted patiently until the others were ready to resume the interrupted conversation.

"Come, John," said one of them in tones of entreaty, "give the woman a quarter!" "No," replied John, "not a penny, I never give anything in the street."

"But this is a very deserving and pressing case." (Here the woman at his side broke into toars.)

"It may be, indeed It seems to be, but I'm not sure of it. I'll tell you what I'll do; I'll givo her a great many quarters under a certain condition."

"What is it!" asked the friend, and the two men and the women came closer to bear the answer.

"The condition is this" (John was now speaking directly to the woman): "If you will. go to the offices of the New York Charitles Organization Society association at 9 o'clock, tell the same same story you've told here and their investigation shall substantiate it, 1'il promise to give you $10 myself and see that you and the children are taken care of until your lusband is ugain able to work.'

"Thank you, sir," said the woman, as she dried her eyes, "they'll find it just as I have

THEY MET THE NEXT MORNING. The next morning promptly the three me met at the office of the New York Charities Organization society.

The woman did not come! "There is no chance of that woman commig here," said one of the officers of the society after listening to the description. "She's n professional pamper."

"Do you mean to tell me," demanded one c the visitors, 'that that poor woman's tear were but the expression of a simulated and not n real sorrow, that the unmistakable sighs of suffering which I saw written indelibly all over her face were only affected!"

"Yes, sir," replied the officer, "that's what i exactly mean to tell you. The professional pauper, constantly making what we call a long face, fluilly gets the facial muscles so thoroughly under coutrol as to be able at a moment's notice to assume the expression of abject suffering and woe. The younger nembers of the profession can thoroughly relax the facial muscles when the object which called them into play has been achieved and the face may then be made to resume its normal condition of cheerfulness. But with the old stagers it is otherwise. A constant straining of these muscles in drawing down the face so develops them as to make them nlways prominent, and hence their natural exn, notwithstanding how well they or living, becomes one of melancholy. So it is with their voices. The professional pauper's voice is so constantly pitched in pleading, whimpering tones that very soon gets down to a whine as its normal condition. So skillful do they eventually become in assuming the manner and tones and appearance of a really suffering and deserving person that they will often deceive those having experience in such matters. They have reduced alms getting to an art and mendicancy to a science; their tears come without sorrow and their nerves twitch without pain.

'And why," demanded the questioner, "if the professional pauper is such a skillful actor that he can present a perfect picture of woe, with overy little detail carried out with faultless art-why, I say, if be can do all this does he not forsake mendicancy, which is but uncertain and desultory, at best, and take to the stage, where such superior mimicry would insure him an honest competence!"

"I'll answer this question," replied the offlcer, "if you will explain to me why the cracksman, who is at once a metal worker and a mechanician, and often a shrewd man of business to boot, does not confine blusself to legitimate enterpasses? I might guess that it was because his in tinets are vicious, and that getting a hving by honest means would take all the sauce and flavor out of life for him."-Brooklyn Eagle.

A DIVERSION WITH WINCHESTERS.

Shooting at a Bear in a Tece-Top-Wonderful Vitality-Beath to Dogs. The dogs were grouped at the foot of a plne tree so tall that when we looked up along the trunk we had to hold our hats on. There wasn't a limb nearer the ground than 100 feet, and on a limb so far above the lower one that he looked no larger than a coon lay a bear, apparently as cool and collected as if he didn't think it possible for a ball to get up that far and disturb him.

All three of us whanged awny with our Winchesters, and every shot told somewhere on the bear, for we could see him give a start after each one. But he kept low on the limb until I sent a fourth ball into him. Then he the dogs yell with joy. The hear shot down toward the ground, right along the trunk of tho tree, and, after falling fifty feet, he turned a complete somersault, which brought him with his paws against the tree. Quick as lightning he grabbed for it, caught it, and his hold was strong enough to stop his fall. He hung there for a moment, and blood from his wounds pattered down to the ground like drops of rain. The dogs were wild with excitement, and their yelps and barks and the howls of the wounded bear, dying as he hung in mld air, were enough to work the coolest of bunters up to the highest pitch of excitement. Pres ently the bear's bold began to weaken. He slid down a few feet, managed to stop himself again, but only for a few seconds. Then he slid again, slowly at first, but more rapidly as ho came down, and when within twenty five feet of the ground he lost his grip on the tree, and with a yell that I guess you could have heard a mile he fell heavily in the midst of the dogs. They mounted the poor wounded brute as he lay. The bear railied, rose to his feet, and then to his haunches, and quick as lightning caught a dog under each arm. There were two wild yelps, and two dogs were crushed to death in the hear's hug. Then the ben'r fell to the ground as dead as a stone. He was shot through the heart and the kidneys and yet lived all that time. - New York Sun.

A New Kink in Cremation.

William Lowrie, the superintendent of the gas works at Monongahela City, has made a new discovery in the cremation line by which ho can cremate bodies on a new and improved plan. Hy his plan the remains are not reduced to ashes, but, on the contrary, he will take the body and in a short time return to friends the residuum, which they can stand up in the corner or keep in any shape that forever and they will have to look for in their tastes may desire. Lately some of Mr. Lowrie's friends killed a common-sized dos and brought the remains to the gas works. There was no gas being made at the time, the retorts all being enapty. The dog was weighed, and balanced in the scales at thirtyeight pounds.

The retort being heated to a proper degree the body was shoved in, and the caps screwe on. The gas gauge was watched, and it was erated he made 180 feet of gas. In the course of a couple of hours the retort was opened and the frame of the once active canine re moved. Instead of being incinerated into ashes, the frame was whole, being formed into a perfect piece of coke, with heart, liver and ribs all intact. The residuum could be handled with no more danger of breaking than ar ordinary piece of coked coal, and when removed but a very slight odor was emitted from the retort. Confinement in the alr tight retort caused the body to coke instead of reducing It to ashes. - Pittsburg Letter.

Gen. Hancock Heiped Cook the Dinner One of Gen. Hancock's Washington friends was a liquor merchant named Esberg, whkept a bachelor's hall at Georgetown, was a great favorite with public men of all politics and had a French cook of reputation and e good wine cellar. Whenever Gen. Hancock Penny & McAlleter. came to Washington Esberg used to give him a dinner, after which would come a game of whist, the stakes to go to the servants.

One day dinner was set for 6 o'clock and Hancock was invited. The chef tarried too long at the wine cup and fell into a stupor. When the guests arrived nothing had beer done toward getting dinner ready. The gen eral suggested that they should cook the din ner themselves. A half dozen canvas back ducks and a dozen fillets were liunted up, the table set, and in three-quarters of an hour a good dinner was ready. Hancock helped cook the ducks, and timed them with his watch, dressed the salad, and ate with great "Thank benven," be said, "we aren't at the mercy of a drunken cook, at least so ful as opening the claret and champagne are concerned. This is the best dinner I have had since the war."-New York Sun.

The Rector and the Doctor.

"The two learned people of the village," says Dr. Oliver Wendell Hotmes, telling of his fanciful Arrowhead Village, "were the rector and the doctor. These two worthles kept up the eld controversy between the professions which grows out of the fact that one studies nature from below upward, and the other above downward. The rector maintained that physicians contracted a squint which turns their eyes inwardly, while the muscles which roll their eyes moward become palsied. The doctor retorted that the theological students developed a third eyelld—nictitatluz membrane-which is so well known in birds, and which serves to shut out, not all light, but all the light they do not want."-Exchange.
